

A statement to the fact of the common attitude is most expressed by Life Magazine Journalist George W Ball

"But at least for the next several decades, the discontent of the poorer nations does not threaten world destruction..

Shameful as it is undoubtedly may be the world has lived two thirds poor and one third rich for generations (p83 29/03/68).

He clearly believes in his "rationality" about a subject world view, a calvanistic pessimism that there are the damned and there are the blessed, as Calvinism

Interestingly - if this

"Religious refugees poured into Geneva, especially France during the 1550s as the French government became increasingly intolerant but also from England, Scotland, Italy and other parts of Europe into which Calvinism had spread"

"While Lutheranism was largely confined to parts of Germany and Scandinavia, Calvinism spread to England, Scotland, France, and the Netherlands, the English speaking colonies of North America and parts of Germany and central Europe"

"Land enclosure (<sup>Public spaces</sup> dissolution of monasteries), yeomanry take over, "people left" under fear for their lives of an oppressive force clearing the land of its people." (Clearing of public spaces and families in the church, and replacing them with "Assured Rents")

"The agricultural began in Great Britain around the turn of the 18th century" - Enclosure acts - made 'em that stayed work the land on a big scale - fight against idleness
